* from the Atlantic Ocean to the Pacific is estimated by very recent authors at 125,400, at 137,800, at 157,500, at 173,400, at 205,500, and at 238,400 square marine leagues, 20 to a degree : and it appeared to me impossible from those varying statements, of which the difference amounts to more than 100,000 square leagues, that is to six times the superficies of France, to find a result with which we might compare the surfaces of the new free states of Spanish America. In some instances the same author has, at different periods, given very different estimates of the same territory, bounded by the two seas between Cape Hatteras and the Rio Columbia, between the mouth of the Mississippi and the lake des Bois. Mr. Mellish, in his map of 1816, has estimated the United States at 2,450,350 square miles (60°2 to a degree), of which the territory of the Missouri alone is made 1,580,000. In his Travels through the United States of America, 1818, p. 561, he fixes the contents at 1,883,806 square miles, of which the territory of the Missouri is estimated at 985,250. Still later, in his Geographical Description of the United States, 1822, p. 17, he again increases the calculation to 2,076,410 square miles. These fluctuations of opinion respecting the extent of the surface of the United States cannot be attributed to the various ways in which the limits are traced : the errors for the most part which affect the extent of the territory between the Mississippi and the Rocky Mountains, and between those mountains and the coast of the Pacific, arise from mere mistakes of calculation. I find in taking the average of several estimates, on the maps of Arrowsmith, Mellish, Tardieu, and Brué :—
