You simply have to remember that, while you are in the cloud, your server becomes just a piece of data in the server pool. As a result of this, the Internet Engineering Task Force (IETF) has published a draft that aims at protecting against download attacks with the goal of allowing your application to remain safe at all times. There are two attack vectors that you have to be aware of: Download attacks WebSocket attacks Both are very annoying and damage the credibility of your service. In this post, we will see how to detect these attacks and defend ourselves. Download attacks The ITF have defined a set of signature strings that are used to detect whether an attack is taking place or not. The signature strings are specific to the HTTP response that is created by the attacker. In the case of a HTTP GET, the attacker sends the following parameters in his request: Connection: Keep-Alive Accept: / User-Agent: Mozilla/5.0 (Windows NT 6.2) AppleWebKit/534.30 (KHTML, like Gecko) Chrome/12.0.742.100 Safari/534.30 X-Requested-With: XMLHttpRequest If we have access to the HTTP response, we can check for the presence of the following strings in the headers: Connection: keep-alive Keep-Alive: timeout=3000, max=1000 If any of these strings is present, it means that the attacker wants to trick us. By setting these headers, he may hijack our bandwidth and also use your server for his personal use. If an attacker has already managed to set these parameters, your server may be already being used by the attacker and you should follow the steps below to avoid more damage. Add to ELB the option "Allow HTTPS Only"
