Adults use Photoshop to edit, modify, and enhance photos and other images as part of their design or layout job. Kids should get a sneak preview of some of the stuff they can create and do with Photoshop at an early age. In this section, I share the many ways that Photoshop is used in the creative world. ## Decorating and Creating Graphics Photoshop is an editor, which means that you can create and edit images on the computer. By looking at Photoshop in terms of how it enables you to edit images, you can see how it can support creative ideas in various ways. In this section, I focus on the creative world of graphic design, which takes full advantage of Photoshop's capabilities and tools to create images. Every time you create a graphic image or photo, you use Photoshop. Let me prove my point. After you insert a photo into a page of a book, for example, you need to crop it (or part of it) so that it fits the page. Sometimes you want a little magnification of the photo, so you can crop out extraneous matter. Photoshop is a great tool for this. You can crop or magnify an image, and then you can place it back on the page to see how it looks. Similarly, you can take a photo of a design you've created in a book or other publication, and then you can crop it to fit a page in a book or other publication. In this way, you can use Photoshop as a graphics editor, which helps to create and produce art. If you look at your school curriculum, you'll find that visual arts and design (VAD) classes cover aspects of Photoshop and other image-editing programs. Students use the programs to create their own work in school or after class to make edits on their creations. ## Using Photoshop for Graphic Design Graphic design has a long history. In the 1970s, designers used tools such as Quark, Adobe Illustrator, and Photoshop to create logos and other designs. The aim of graphic design is to make it easy for people to understand the design idea. That

Photojournalism "I was walking down State Street in San Francisco on my way back from the airport, and I saw something I couldn't explain. I saw the train station in the distance lit up. If you had looked in my direction, you would have seen me stop and take a picture. When I got home, I was excited by the image. "Crammed in the bay between a ship and a freighter, was a ferris wheel. The juxtaposition between the two is the basis for the image I had taken. I had never seen anything like it before, and I wanted to record it. It seemed a bit of a miracle to me."The present invention relates to a substrate with a weakened structure. More particularly, the present invention relates to a substrate with a weakened structure, and a method of manufacturing the same. In a semiconductor process, a photoresist composition or a resist material is coated on a substrate to form a photosensitive layer. The photosensitive layer is exposed using a photomask having a pattern formed thereon, and is developed. Subsequently, portions of the photosensitive layer are removed using the photomask pattern to form a pattern on the substrate. However, the pattern formed on the substrate may be undesirably degraded due to diffusion or the like in the development of the photosensitive layer. To this end, a so-called modified photoresist composition has been proposed. In the conventional technology, the photoresist composition is coated on a substrate on which a circuit is formed to form a photosensitive layer. Subsequently, the photosensitive layer is exposed using a photomask having a pattern formed thereon, and is developed. Thereafter, portions of the photosensitive layer remain over a region to be patterned, whereas portions of the photosensitive layer are removed from a region where a circuit is not to be formed, by using the photomask pattern. Generally, in a resin composition used for the photosensitive layer, a resin selected from an acrylic resin, a novolak resin, or a polyhydroxystyrene resin is mixed with a naphthoquinonediazide compound. However, when the modified photoresist composition is used, the naphthoquinonediazide compound tends to be reacted with the acrylic resin. Thus, the resulting modified photoresist composition tends to have poor chemical properties. Further, the modified photoresist composition may be An injured and naked Carl was taken to the MGH for further treatment and evaluation. The woman pulled a knife on him, arguing that he was responsible for the missing drugs. She admitted to a police officer that the plan was to steal the drugs from the pharmacy. Officer Jurek interviewed Carl about the event. After asking Carl how he was injured, Carl revealed that he had been shot. Jurek then questioned the woman, who admitted that she and Carl had broken into the pharmacy earlier that day. She stated that Carl planned to steal the prescription drugs. She also told the officer that Carl had received a wound to his neck and that he had also been stabbed in the abdomen and buttocks. During an interview with the Boston Globe, Carl said that he was the victim of attempted murder. Carl's injuries appeared minor. He was able to walk and talk with a few tears running down his face. Jurek stated that Carl needed to be evaluated at a hospital to determine his medical condition. Investigators interviewed the woman again, who again admitted that she and Carl had planned to steal the prescription drugs. She admitted that she had a handgun but that the two had been unable to open the safe that held the drugs. Officers questioned the woman's boyfriend about the events that had occurred. He told them that the woman and Carl had spent the day together at a park. The man said that he dropped the woman off at her house to go get Carl and bring him back to the park. The man then left and returned to the park in time to see the woman and Carl returning to his apartment.
